When Arias announced he was retiring from the sport, he spoke often of the thrill of competing and the joy of representing his country. One of the latter was to see French Open champ Rafael Nadal feel the wrath of an unprecedented outburst of Colombian fans as he dropped two matches to Novak Djokovic. Add to that growing interest in how the physically demanding physique of tennis players conforms to a modern body and give credit to the body fat-measuring lab of LabCorp in Raleigh, North Carolina, and the question is this: how do the tennis body comp and body fat percentages differ from those of American men of the same age as Rafael Nadal and Roger Federer? Add to that growing interest in how the physically demanding physique of tennis players conforms to a modern body and give credit to the body fat-measuring lab of LabCorp in Raleigh, North Carolina, and the question is this: how do the tennis body comp and body fat percentages differ from those of American men of the same age as Rafael Nadal and Roger Federer? Abundant evidence points to the fact that tennis players are leaner and more muscular than the average American man. For example, tennis bodies are typically shorter than the average man and women, and athletes in basketball, football and soccer are at least as heavy as those in the same sports in the United States. The only meaningful evidence that the game has contributed to fatness is the fact that top male tennis players (Nadal, Federer, Djokovic, Andy Roddick, James Blake) are about on average a
